According to Cameron, faced with the facts of history, Cameron, as a child of 1872, took up arms and engaged in acts of resistance. His actions, however, were not limited to the immediate context of his own life; they extended across the globe, from Europe to the Americas, and from Africa to Asia.

The young revolutionary, who later became a prominent political figure, was deeply influenced by the ideas of anarchism and communism. He believed in the power of the people to overthrow the existing social order and create a new world order based on equality and freedom. His activism was characterized by a commitment to non-violence and a belief in the transformative power of direct action.

Cameron's work was not only theoretical; it was also practical. He organized and participated in protests, rallies, and other forms of civil disobedience. He was known for his ability to mobilize large groups of people, and his speeches and writings inspired many to join the struggle.

Despite facing frequent arrests and other forms of persecution, Cameron remained steadfast in his commitment to the cause. His legacy continues to inspire activists around the world, who seek to build a more just and equitable society.
FOCO Newsletter, Regional Commission of the Left

The Foco Newsletter was published from 1974 to 1977. It was an on-and-off project initially started by John Alkington, Peter Anderson, and Judy Garner. It served as an organiser for discussions on local FOCO activities. The newsletter was a platform for sharing the members' personal correspondence, which included discussions on the history of the Left and its legacy.

In 1960, the venue was the National Council of Trade Unions (NCTU), which was known for deploying its candidates for the house of representatives. The NCTU was a commercial/industrial union that functioned to a radical but not quite revolutionary movement in the 1960s, which resulted in the movement being suspended by the Labour government. In 1975, the various left wing political parties were under severe pressure from an industrial union, which was then considered to be an attack on the Labour government. The Labour government was represented by the NDP.

The CPC of 1960 was established for the purpose of preserving the Labour government. The group ended up in the NCTU. The NCTU was a conservative organisation that regulated the individual and collective correspondence. The group's attitude was that a commercial/industrial union, which was also employed to get itself into the NCTU, would have to work for its future survival. The group's financial position was not expected to improve.

Judy Garner described the group as "a creative group of people" that was not a radical but had a radical air. The group was joined by a young man, Gordon Waddington, who had been involved in the Second World War. He joined the group after his engagement with a radical, and it was believed that he was a member of the group. A member of the group, who was a member of a group that had joined the Labour government, was instrumental in the group's survival.
